Enhancing Resilience of the Agricultural Sector

Israel, February 3-14, 2025

Background

National food systems must ensure a reliable, continuous and ample supply of safe, healthy, affordable, and diverse food to all citizens. In order to do so, a sustainable management of natural resources and the strengthening of the agricultural and rural sectors are necessary, in order to improve the quality of life of the most vulnerable populations and to mitigate the effects of climate change, natural disasters and man-made threats and emergencies.

Since its independence in 1948, the State of Israel has had to guarantee the food security of a constantly and sharply growing population, while facing harsh climate conditions and limited land and water availability. With more than 50% of its territory classified as a desert, Israel has succeeded in finding solutions for the efficient use of scarce resources and developing a flourishing agricultural sector renowned for its accomplishments and characterized by high productivity and technological innovation. And yet, Israel's food system is very much dependant on import of commodities, basic food products and raw materials.

Global changes, emergencies and crises require continuous adaptation and implementation of new strategies. Israel's present policies aim to enhance the resilience of it's agricultural and rural sector, committed to ensure food security and safeguarding the communities' well-being, while encouraging innovation and entrepreneurship together with the preservation of the environment.

Background

The traditional farming system of India prior to the 20th century was generally organic or natural with low production potential. Chemo-centric technological advancement during Green Revolution period boosted the production potential and provided food security to the nation. However, over a period of time, this production system has started exhibiting its carrying capacity as reflected by production plateau in green revolution belt. The success of industrial agriculture and the green revolution in recent decades has often masked significant externalities, especially sustainability of natural resources such as deterioration of soil health, depletion of groundwater, depletion of bio diversity, degradation of ecology and environment, poor nutrition and less farm income due to high input cost, etc. Increasing consciousness about conservation of environment as well as health hazards associated with agrochemicals and consumers' preference to safe and hazard-free food are the major factors that lead to the growing interest in alternate forms of agriculture in the world.

Organic and natural farming are among the broad spectrum of production systems that are supportive to the environment. These farming systems are non-chemical farming systems that promote biodiversity and sustainable development. However, they differ in their approach to soil, fertilizers, and other practices. Natural farming (NF) is a traditional, chemical-free farming rooted in Indian tradition enriched with modern understanding of ecology, resource recycling and on-farm resource optimization. It doesn't use external fertilizers or plowing, and instead encourages the decomposition of organic matter by microbes and earthworms. This method is based on biomass mulching, green cover, and indigenous cow-based dung and urine formulations. It is often cost-effective and requires fewer external inputs, whereas organic farming (OF) uses organic fertilizers and manures like compost, vermicompost, and cow dung manure. It also requires basic agro practices like plowing, tilting, mixing of manures, and weeding. It can be expensive because of the need for bulk manures, and it can have an ecological impact on the surrounding environment. The Government of India recently approved the launching of the National Mission on Natural Farming (NMNF) to promote natural farming across the country. The NMNF is a standalone centrally sponsored scheme under the ministry of agriculture & farmers' welfare. It has a total outlay of Rs. 2,481 crore. In the next two years, the government plans to implement NMNF in 15,000 clusters in gram panchayats, which are willing, and reach one crore farmers and initiate natural farming (NF) in 7.5 lakh ha area.

In India, efforts to develop, refine and disseminate organic farming technologies have been underway for nearly three decades and made significant progress even though there are several constraints that affect adoption, whereas in case of natural farming, there is an urgent need to understand biological systems and the natural processes and to refine the existing knowledge of the practice that the farmers have the space and power to make decision based on their local contexts. Under the theme of the topic of winter school becomes essential to nurture the growing science to reach higher level of agricultural sustainability.

Objectives

- To develop skill to undertake research and extension activities in organic/natural farming systems for sustainable management of natural resources, and rural livelihood security
- To acquaint various technical and management aspects of organic/natural farming to act as an extension agent in research and training
- To expose the trainees on the recent developments in organic/natural farming for sustainable crop production

Course outline

Course contents will broadly cover

- Concepts, scopes, constraints and prospects of organic farming and natural farming
- Importance of soil health and present day soil management practices
- ITK in organic and natural farming
- Soil and water conservation practices
- Forage crops as a component of organic/natural farming
- Integration of livestock in organic/natural farming
- Biodiversity vis-à-vis organic/natural farming
- Certification, quality and marketing
- Climate change and environmental aspects
- Prospects of eco-tourism under organic and natural farming
- Linkages & extension approaches for promotion of organic and natural farming

ICAR Sponsored Winter School on Advances in Geospatial techniques for Soil Resource Mapping and Management

05 - 25 February 2025

Organized by

ICAR-NBSS&LUP, Regional Centre, Udaipur

CAR-National Bureau of Soil Survey and Land Use Planning
Amravati Road, Nagpur-440 033

<https://nbsslup.icar.gov.in>

Background

Soil is an indispensable natural resource that underpins terrestrial ecosystems and serves as the cornerstone of agriculture, forestry, and environmental sustainability. Its effective management and conservation are crucial for ensuring food security, preserving biodiversity, and mitigating the impacts of climate change. A comprehensive land resource inventory and management approach is fundamental to sustainable crop production and the assurance of long-term food security. Traditional soil surveying methods, while valuable, are often constrained by their time-intensive, laborious nature and limited spatial coverage. In contrast, modern soil resource mapping employs advanced geospatial techniques, providing precise and efficient tools for understanding soil properties, their spatial distribution, and overall condition. These insights enable informed decision-making and sustainable land use planning.

In recent decades, geospatial technologies have transformed soil resource management. Tools such as remote sensing (RS), geographic information systems (GIS), and digital soil mapping (DSM) utilize spatial data to tackle the complexities of soil resource management. These technologies facilitate detailed analyses of soil properties, modeling of soil processes, and the development of strategies for sustainable land management. Additionally, they address critical global challenges, including soil degradation, erosion, and nutrient depletion, while supporting precision agriculture, land restoration, and climate change adaptation. Despite challenges such as limited data accessibility and the demand for skilled expertise, advancements in geospatial technologies hold immense potential. They provide innovative solutions for enhancing soil health and ensuring the sustainable utilization of this vital resource, thereby contributing to global food security and environmental sustainability.

To build capacity in these transformative geospatial techniques, ICAR-National Bureau of Soil Survey and Land Use Planning (NBSS&LUP), Nagpur, is actively engaged in creating soil-based thematic databases and maps through field surveys, soil analysis, cartography, and the integration of remote sensing, GPS, and GIS. Recognizing the growing need for specialized training, ICAR-NBSS&LUP, Regional Centre, Udaipur, is organizing a hands-on training program titled "Advances in Geospatial Techniques for Soil Resource Mapping and Management" from February 05 to 25, 2025.

This program will provide practical exposure to soil surveying, landform identification, and geospatial tools. Participants will gain valuable skills in soil resource mapping and management, empowering them to contribute effectively to soil-based developmental programs and sustainable land management initiatives.
